THE PARTY THAT DOES THINGS

In a recent speech at Charles City, Iowa, Mr. Bryan gave three reasons for predicting that the next president would not be a Republican: "First, the evident growth in popularity of Democratic ideas; second, because of the dissension among Republicans; third, the utterances of Republicans, who admit that they have no chance for success unless the proper man is chosen; and the different factions of the party disagree on the proper man."

What makes an ideal Democratic? A party cannot prevent a competing party from taking up any proposition in the platform of its competitor. Mr. Bryan and his millions of admirers should be glad to have the Republicans pay so high a compliment, so conspicuous a tribute, to the Democratic party as the present administration has done. Instead of crying "Stop thief! Don't run off with our issues," the eloquent Nebraskan should rejoice that what he claims as his issues are adopted by a party that does things. However great and good a policy might be, of what benefit could it be to the American people while it remained in the platform, and in no other platform than that of a party which gets control of legislation for only two years out of more than fifty years?

Of course the Democrats may win in 1908. That is always a possibility of a presidential campaign. But they cannot possibly control the houses of congress. Therefore, a Democratic victory would amount to indefinite postponement of all partisan measures. But the "dissension among Republicans" is no assurance of Democratic gain. The Republican party is a thoroughly organized party, whose members are amenable to discipline. In 1900, on the eve of the campaign, there was war, seemingly bitter and vindictive, among the Republicans in congress, but the party got together and achieved an easy and great victory over the demoralized Democracy, whom Colonel Bryan had boldly boasted into a reaffirmation of 16 to 1, although the Democrats, in compliance with Mr. Bryan's wish, "paramounted" anti-imperialism, and this gave them no apparent increase of strength.

Does Mr. Bryan remember the campaign of 1880, when, in the Chicago Republican national convention there was a phenomenal disagreement as to "the proper man," and a factional fight of extreme bitterness? In that year the Democrats should have won hands down, for it was the next election year after the counting out of Mr. Tilden. But the Republican factions got together. Grant took Conkling to Mentor and the war was over. Don't count on a Republican disaffection or disgruntlement as yet. Such conditions may prevail a year hence, but the precedents are not now pointing that way. Whereas in the Democratic party at this time there is no appearance of enthusiasm, nor has there been since the Democratic leader threw an ice water bath on the bright hopes and splendid prospects of both factions of his party who had assembled to welcome him home from the Old World. "The tender grace of a day that is dead" is not likely to return.—Washington Post.

DISFRANCHISEMENT IN GEORGIA

The so-called "disfranchisement bill" which has now passed both branches of the Georgia legislature, embodies the suggestion of Governor Hoke Smith as presented by him in messages and in speeches, and as approved by the people in the last gubernatorial campaign, when the question of "negro disfranchisement" was the leading issue. It contains no strikingly original provisions, following substantially the suffrage schemes of other southern states. It is claimed, however, that it is framed with such care that no successful attack upon it, on constitutional grounds, will be possible in the federal courts.

What the bill does is to provide for the submission to the people of an amendment to the suffrage article of the state constitution, such amendment prescribing certain qualifications for the exercise of the voting privilege. The "grandfather clause" and the "understanding-the-constitution" test have been incorporated into the amendment. The avowed object of the amendment is to disfranchise the illiterate blacks without endangering the suffrage right of the illiterate whites as a class. To accomplish this, it is provided that only those citizens shall be allowed to vote who come under some one of the following qualifications:

- Honorable service in any war of the United States with a foreign power or with Indians.
- Honorable service on the confederate side in the Civil war.
- Lawful descent from those embraced in the above-named classes.
- Ownership of forty acres of land in the state or of property of any kind assessed for taxation at $500.
- The possession of a good character and comprehension of the obligations of republican citizenship.
- Ability correctly to read and write any paragraph of the federal constitution, or, in case of persons physically disabled, ability reasonably to interpret any paragraph of the same instrument.
- Obviously, there is no apparent discrimination against blacks as such. But it is the registrars who will determine the existence of ability to "understand" or "interpret" the constitution, the possession of "good character" and of sufficient intelligence to comprehend the duties of citizenship. All agree that if the registrars shall be equal to their task the great majority of the negroes will be disfranchised by the amendment. As to the white illiterates, the "good citizenship" clause is expected to cover a multitude of other shortcomings.

PEACE EXPERTS FOR LIMITATION

Hague Conference Decides to Follow Lead Set by the English Delegate

By Associated Press.

THE HAGUE, August 17.—The peace conference here unanimously adopted the resolutions of Sir Edward Fry, the British delegate, confirming the resolution of the first peace conference regarding the limitation of military burdens and declaring that as military burdens since then had been considerably augmented, it is highly desirable that "governments earnestly resume the study of the question." The conference listened closely to Sir Edward's speech, where in he recalled that the convoking of the peace conference had primarily in view the stopping of augmentation of armaments. He announced that Britain is ready to communicate its plans of warships to all powers inclined to do likewise.

The Russian, French, Spanish and United States Delegates formally endorsed the British resolutions.

M. Nelidoff, head of the Russian delegation and president of the conference, said that the disarmament suggestion is immature now, as a discussion of it would be not only sterile, but injurious to the cause of peace, because it would show a divergence of opinions, although in reality a unity of intentions exists which may one day lead to realization.

Nelidoff therefore proposed a unanimous adoption of the resolutions, which was voted accordingly.

FOOLED DENVERITES

Arizona Cattleman Thought He Was an Actor in Disguise

With every newspaper in the entire town making a different guess as to his purpose in attending the cattlemen's convention in Denver, Cris E. Ellerbe was variously put down as being anything from a secret service agent, who was supposed to be the special representative of President Roosevelt, to an actor who was playing the part of a cowpuncher.

Mr. Ellerbe has returned to his ranch at Dos Cabezas near Willcox. He was formerly a resident of St. Louis, but for several years has lived in Arizona. He came here originally from St. Louis on a pleasure trip and was so taken with the country that he decided to locate here.

No one was more amused than was Mr. Ellerbe at the speculation that was indulged in as to whether he was a real cowpuncher or an actor who was essaying the role of a knight of the plains.

Finally, to convince a party of skeptical Denverites, he ordered a broncho brought out, and on a wager that he could remain on the hurricane deck of the animal, he won a supper. The horse bucked all right. He "pitched" magnificently. He twisted and turned in great fashion, but Mr. Ellerbe easily maintained his seat. The Denverites willingly paid for the supper.

It was to represent Governor Kibbey and the cattlemen here that Mr. Ellerbe made the journey to Denver as a delegate of the Arizona cattlemen. He took a prominent part in the convention.

FORMER GLOBE MINING MAN TRIMMED IN K. C.

William Beard, well known here and at Globe as a successful mining man, has fallen into the hands of Kansas real estate sharks and got pinched for about $46,000. They sold him a vast acreage of rock land in Missouri which they induced him to buy without inspecting it. William had better return to Arizona to invest in land where real estate sharks are not tolerated.—Florance Blade.

CALAMITY HOWL FROM OIL KING

stopping of the wheels of progress; without, all is at a standstill.

Investor Frightened
"The investor, great and small, looks up his money and refuses to venture forth.

"I do not need your stock market report, your editorials, your predictions and forebodings to prove to myself the truth of my words. I have a way of knowing absolutely—a way which has never failed me in the long years of my business career. That is the way I am judging the financial situation, from the attitude of the financial world toward myself. Let me illustrate:

"There was a time, not long ago, before the present runaway, hit or miss, impulsive agitation began that I would be called up on the telephone, say, by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., say by Mr. Morgan's office, and in terms asked if I wanted to come in a syndicate and a certain allotment of shares. The chance was given me, but I was also told that I would have to make immediate answer. If my reply was that I needed several days for consideration, the telephone receiver would be hung up, in all likelihood. When I called several days after and said I would go into the syndicate I would be curtly informed that I had lost my opportunity, that the syndicate had been completed.

Says Money Is Needed
"What is the situation now? I am called and asked to participate in many syndicates, but in none of them is the time decision fixed on the instant. Instead of the former attitude, I know they are content to await my decision and I know there is no danger that I will be too late.

"I can judge in a day. Requests are coming to me today for money from quarters it was least expected would be asking for money some time ago. Today I was offered an unprecedented interest of 7 per cent for one million or two million or three million. The security was beyond all criticism. That would be impossible in this country if there was confidence enough in the outlook to unlock the money vaults of the country.

"I know that the railroads of the United States today are unable to borrow money for any length of time. Formerly they could obtain it for eight or ten years in great amounts. They are very well satisfied to take anything they can get now for a short term. Recently I was offered car trusts, one of the safest possible investments, at the rate of 6 1/2 to 7 per cent, and they were very glad to give that rate, although there is a margin on the safety side of these loans.

"I judge of the condition of the country by these things I have told and by others which come directly under my notice, under the notice of my personal representative, my son, and others.

"It is really of no great moment to me. I am through with business. Loss or gain no longer affects me. I am content as I am today. I am in better health than I have been for many years. I am happier than I have been for twelve years or more.

Lands Hughes and Taft
"Why are men making these offers to me now? It is because of a lack of confidence of the resources of the country, not because there is any danger of foreign entanglements, not because of crop failures nor of the monetary policy, nor of any social condition, but because of a lack of confidence in the administration."

Mr. Rockefeller was loud in praise of Secretary Taft and Charles E. Hughes, governor of New York.

"Both of them," he said, "are deliberate men, safe men."

Secretary Taft, Mr. Rockefeller said, he believed to be a man who would do as his conscience dictated, and that he would not be guided by the beliefs and policies of a predecessor.

"How has the Standard Oil company prospered? What has been the secret of the marvelous cohesive force of the company?" continued Mr. Rockefeller. "Nothing but absolute confidence in each other. Nothing but confidence in the company. It could not have lasted had there been any of this browbeating and crushing they speak of."

SKALMER GOT MONEY ON BOGUS CHECKS
Sam Skalmier is under arrest in Globe for obtaining money under false pretenses alleged to have been committed here on checks amounting to $30 paid by Mike Leahy and Scott & Thornton. Deputy Sheriff Frank Clark will go to Globe late this afternoon to bring Skalmier to trial here. The complainants say they will not push the case if the checks are repaid to them and the cost of prosecution Skalmier is also to pay. But it is a question whether Skalmier's relatives, Mr. and Mrs. William Kline, can be induced to help him.—Douglas International-American.
